

Wisconsin Public Utility Institute

Dan Barroilhet holds an economics degree from Washington University in St. Louis and a JD from Marquette University. For over a decade, he was a regional economist and a projections economist with the Department of Workforce Development's Office of Economic Advisors. For the last three years, he has been the Department of Administration's demographer, working with population estimates and population projections.