PHILIP JONES

Alliance for Transportation Electrification

Philip Jones is president of Phil Jones Consulting LLC based in Seattle, Washington, providing expert advice and consulting services for organizations in the fields of energy and utility regulation, communications regulation, and cybersecurity compliance and regulation. Phil also is executive director of the Alliance for Transportation Electrification (ATE) which is a recently-established industry-funded non-profit association that seeks to promote the acceleration of transportation electrification deployments, a robust utility role, and interoperability and open standards. Additionally, he works in market development, works with potential independent system operators (ISO's) in the western states, and does work with EV infrastructure and distributed energy resources. Phil served as a commissioner on the Washington Utilities and Transportation Commission (WUTC) from 2005-2017. He served in many leadership positions in NARUC during his tenure with WUTC, including serving as president of NARUC in 2012-13.

Phil serves as a director or as an advisor for several organizations: Western Grid Group, which advocates for clean energy resources and an efficient transmission grid in the western states; Energy Impact Partners (EIP), New York City, a private equity infrastructure fund comprising major utility investors which seeks to invest in innovative young technology companies focused on the energy sector; Carbon Washington and Climate Solutions, non-profits based in Washington State; and the EPRI Advisory Council. He is a native of Spokane, Washington, and a Harvard College graduate.
