RICHARD HEINEMANN

Boardman Clark LLP

Richard Heinemann provides legal services to a wide range of municipalities and local governments in Wisconsin, Illinois, Minnesota, and throughout the upper Midwest. His primary focus is energy law, but his practice extends to all areas of municipal utility service, including water, wastewater, broadband and telecommunications, as well as municipal finance.

Richard advises clients on utility asset transfers, power supply and power purchase agreements, renewable energy project development, construction agreements, intergovernmental agreements, sustainability (“green”) practices, brownfield redevelopment, and regulatory compliance. He serves as general counsel for four municipal electric joint action agencies and two intergovernmental commissions. In the area of municipal finance, Richard has served as Issuer’s Counsel on publicly traded utility revenue bond issuances. He also has significant experience on the lender side and regularly advises the Wisconsin Bankers Association on both general obligation and revenue loans to local governments. He is listed in the Bond Buyer’s Municipal Marketplace (“Redbook”). Richard has appeared frequently before the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin and the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission and is licensed in Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Illinois. He has served as chair of Boardman Clark’s executive committee since 2014. He received an A.B. from Brown University, a Ph.D. in German and social thought from the University of Chicago, and his J.D. from the University of Wisconsin Law School.
