

KIRA LOEHR Perkins Coie

Energy law attorney Kira Loehr represents generation, transmission, and distribution utilities as well as consumers before state and federal regulatory agencies and courts. Known for her strategic thinking, Kira assists clients with innovative and effective solutions for energy and environmental regulatory compliance at the state and national levels. Kira regularly advises regulated utility clients through the development and permitting process for generation and transmission projects, including clean energy solutions. She also conducts general civil litigation in state and federal district and appellate courts. Her public utility administrative law experience includes electric and water rate case proceedings, territorial disputes between utilities, energy policy investigations, rulemakings, utility mergers, purchase and sale of utility facilities, innovative rate designs, and construction dockets. Kira has appeared on behalf of clients in more than 100 proceedings before the Public Service Commission of Wisconsin (PSCW) and developed and taught a program entitled “Practice and Procedure before the PSCW.” In addition to her work in state and federal courts around the country, she has assisted clients in matters before the Midcontinent Independent System Operator (MISO), Federal Energy Regulatory Commission (FERC), Iowa Utilities Board (IUB), and the Kentucky Office of Administrative Hearings (OAH). Prior to joining Perkins Coie, Kira presented oral argument before the Wisconsin Supreme Court in a petition for review of the PSCW decision Wisconsin Industrial Energy Group v. Pub. Serv. Comm’n of Wisconsin, one of her several published cases. She is on the board of the Wisconsin Public Utility Institute (WPUI) and is a regular contributor to WPUI programs. She is the former vice president of Customers First! Coalition and the former chairperson of the Public Utilities Section of the State Bar of Wisconsin.
